In Barbados, females in the adult population outnumbered their male counterparts by around 11,000 in each year throughout the review period. Growth for both sexes tended to be very marginal for the period, with each sex rising by just around 2,000 persons over the ten year timeframe.

As at 2013, females constituted approximately 52.7% of the adult population. The adult population comprises those persons aged 15 years and older who live in private households, but excludes visitors to the island. Other categories of persons that are excluded are persons housed in institutions such as senior citizens homes and correctional facilities.
