Did You Know?

Throughout the Caribbean in the early 1930s, there was a series of labour uprisings due to poor working conditions and socioeconomic conditions. This situation gave rise to the establishment of Royal Commissions of Enquiry into the social conditions of the West Indies.

• The recommendations of these Commissions have assisted in shaping the framework for the voluntaristic Industrial Relations climate that is practised in Barbados to this day.

Employment Rights .....For All

The Employment Rights Act, 2012 provides the following rights for employees:

- The right to a written statement of employment particulars.
- The right to an itemised pay statement.
- The right to be consulted before being laid off or placed on short time.
- The right to priority rehiring in certain cases following redundancy.
- The right to a certificate of employment record at the end of a contract of employment.
- The right not to be unfairly dismissed.

The Employment Rights Tribunal

- This Act also provides an Employment Rights Tribunal to determine issues relating to employment rights. Complaints must first be referred to the Chief Labour Officer for an opportunity for a settlement to be reached.
- If settlement is not reached, provision is made for the complaint to be referred by the Chief Labour Officer to the Tribunal.
- The Tribunal in appropriate cases, has the power to award compensation and power to order reinstatement or re-engagement of an unfairly dismissed employee.
- The Tribunal's decision is final and not subject to appeal, other than on a point of law.
